This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

Report of Proceedings.

THE Annual Meeting of the Society was held at Hull on Monday and Tuesday, October 3rd and 4th. The Members met in the East Park during the afternoon of Monday, where the stones of the de la Pole Manor House, otherwise the King's Manor House, which have been recovered during the excavations on the site of the new Post Office, were to be seen. Many of the stones are carved and moulded.

Mr. J. R. Boyle, F.S.A., read a paper on the Manor House, in which he described the family of de la Pole, remarking that probably the founder of the family settled about the close of the thirteenth century at Ravenser Odd, that after some years the family removed to Hull, where a great portion of the town, in a very short time, became the property of the family. The older portion of the Manor House was built by William de la Pole, first Mayor of Hull. He died in 1366, and was succeeded by his son Michael, who greatly enlarged the house. The de la Poles held their Hull property until 1502, when it was seized by the king in consequence of the attainder of Edmund, Earl of Suffolk.

The Manor House and estates of the de la Pole family seem to have been granted to Sir William Sidney, and in later times became the property of the Hildyard family.

The recent excavations for the new Post Office revealed many portions of the foundation of the house, and large quantities of carved and sculptured stones have been brought to light. These interesting relics have been deposited in the East Park that they may be preserved.

The Annual Dinner was held at the "Cross Keys" Hotel, under the Presidency of Lord Hawkesbury, F.S.A., when the Society entertained as its guests Sir Clements R. Markham, K.C.B., President of the Royal Geographical Society; Mr. F. Haverfield, F.S.A., of Christ Church College, Oxford; the Mayor of Hull (Alderman W. Jarman, J.P.); the Ex-Mayor of Hull (Sir Alfred Gelder, J.P.); the Sheriff of Hull (J. H. Fisher, Esq., J.P.); and the Town Clerk of Hull.

After dinner the company adjourned to the Banqueting Room of the Town Hall (kindly lent by the Mayor), when the Annual Meeting for election of officers and transaction of business took place. The officers were all re-elected.

In an adjoining room, many of the records of the Hull Charterhouse and Hull Corporation were exhibited: also a number of pieces of pottery found while excavating in the town in connection with the many improvements now being made.

Sir Clements R. Markham read a paper pointing out the way in which antiquaries and geographers might work together with regard to the changes that have taken place on the coast, and in the tne Rivers Humber, Ouse, and Trent, and about the Isle of Axholme and Hatfield Chase.

Sir Clements Markham's paper is as follows:—

PLAN OF RESEARCH OF THE COUNCIL OF THE ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, RELATING TO THE HOLDERNESS COAST, THE HUMBER, AND ITS TIDAL TRIBUTARIES.

It would be out of place, indeed presumptuous, for me to address you on one of your own subjects without long study and preparation. But I have thought that it may be not without interest to you if I endeavour to put before you the way in which those who pursue different lines of research often find that their studies overlap, and that, when this is the case, mutual co-operation becomes desirable.

Knowledge is really one and undivided, so that it is only the necessities of our very finite powers that oblige us to resort to divisions into sections and branches, which must be more or less arbitrary, and must overlap and run into each other. Each branch of knowledge, each science, is dependent on many others. History cannot make any approach to completeness without archæology, genealogy, numismatology, chronology, sociology, and geography. The mother of all the sciences is geography, for the astronomy of the ancients was not astronomy as it is now understood, but mathematical geography. As knowledge advanced, it was found that further divisions were indispensable, and in the end of the 18th century the science of geology was brought into existence. Geology is the physical geography of prehistoric ages. The proper line between geography and geology, though purely arbitrary, as such divisions must be, is pointed out by common sense. Geography takes cognizance of the existing conditions of the earth's surface, and of the changes within historic times: while geology has for its vast field of study the conditions and the changes in remote prehistoric cycles of ages.

Students of several sciences may often have to study the very same thing, but they do so from their own points of view. My friend, Professor Davis, of Harvard, has recently illustrated this overlapping by an example. He took the coal formation in Pennsylvania. The geographer would treat of it as an element of inorganic environment exerting control over the geographical distribution of industries and population. The geologist would study the origin and erosion of Pennsylvania coal, considered as local elements in the remote history of the earth. The chemist would study its composition, the botanist the ancient plant life it reveals. Thus, students in many different sciences may have to consider, in common, certain aspects of the problems presented by Pennsylvanian coal, for instance. But each student would consider them from the point of view of his own science. It is in this way that different sciences and lines of research often overlap.

Geography and archæology overlap each other in the researches connected with the study of changes on the earth's surface within historic times, and here they should come into friendly relations. For here the geographer needs the assistance of the antiquary, and it is only by antiquarian researches that he can attain the results which enable him to explain what is taking place now on the earth's surface, by the light of former changes. The geographer examines the existing conditions of a region. He ascertains, with the aid of the historian and the antiquary, that, within historic times, great changes have taken place, perhaps entirely altering the former conditions. He is then in a position to investigate the causes which have given rise to these changes, to judge to what extent the same causes are still in force, or whether they have ceased to exist. He is thus enabled not only to describe the actual condition of the portion of the earth's surface to which he has devoted his attention, but also, by the aid of antiquarian and historical researches, he is enabled to give an account of the geographical history of the region, and to explain the nature of the forces which have brought about the results that he sees before him.

On the other hand, there are antiquarian questions which can only be solved by the study of physical geography.

Examples of the need of the antiquary for help from the physical geographer will illustrate this point. Some years ago, a statue of the goddess Nehalennia was found on the beach of the island of Walcheren. The antiquary could identify the goddess, tell who were her votaries, and when and where her cult prevailed; but he had to turn to the geographer to explain her appearance on the Domburg beach in the nineteenth century. I may mention a more distant example to which I recently called the attention of the Americanist Congress at Stuttgart. Near the shores of Lake Titicaca there are some famous ruins which now go by the modern name of Tiahuanacu. They are in the higher Andes, in a region which was included in the empire of the Incas of Peru. The antiquary would notice the principal facts connected with the Tiahuanacu series. The results of his researches would be that the stones were larger than any that have ever been used for building purposes, that the work is elaborate and of the highest merit, and that the sculptures denote a people capable of recording their ideas by symbolical representation. His studies would acquaint him with the traditions handed down by the builders, and with the immense antiquity of their work. He would see there proofs that not only must there have been a highly organised system of government, but also a dense population to raise the edifices of which the Tiahuanacu ruins are the remains. This dense population would need an immense and a constant food supply brought from great distances; for Tiahuanacu is nearly 13,000 feet above the sea level. Corn cannot ripen, and now the country can only maintain a very sparse population, living mainly on chuñus, or potatoes preserved by freezing. It is to the physical geographer that the antiquary must turn for an explanation. Physical science can alone explain how such a country can once have been populous, and the site of a government with a highly organised system of administration, ruling over a people who were far advanced in the arts and in mechanical knowledge. It is a question surrounded by difficulties; but it is a geographical question, possibly even a geological question, and the antiquary must rely on physical science for its solution.

These examples show that antiquarian researches sometimes require the assistance of geography. It is even oftener the case that geographical researches need the help of history and of archæology; and many examples might be mentioned which would serve to illustrate the necessity of historical and antiquarian knowledge for the elucidation of the problems of geography.

Mont St. Michel is an isolated and lofty mass of rock, only connected with the French coast by sands dry at low water. This is all that a geographer would know without the aid of historical research. But M. Manet* tells us of passages in Roman authors in which they speak of the vast forest called the Setiacum nemus, out of which an isolated rock arose, once surmounted by a college of druidesses, then by a temple of Jupiter. If, as M. Manet supposes, this rock was Mont St. Michel, which is perhaps doubtful, the enquirer may trace the gradual changes on the coast through the intervening centuries, and thus fully realise the geographical significance of those changes. The forest and the temple may be mythical, though there seem to be submerged lands bearing timber and Roman remains at several points on that part of the French coast. This does not affect my argument.

Look again at the country of our Batavian neighbours across the North Sea. How little the mere examination of the islands which form the State of Zealand and of Dutch Flanders would tell us from a geographical point of view. But, with a knowledge of all the changes that have taken place, we acquire geographical insight of the greatest value and interest. A visitor to the little agricultural town of Sluys finds it surrounded by highly cultivated land, with farm houses dotted here and there over the landscape. These Flemish farms are on the very site of one of England's greatest naval battles, when our King Edward III. won his victory over the French. It is said that "the King on a ship," which appears on the gold coins of that time, was adopted to commemorate the battle of Sluys. A copy of that coin now ornaments the bindings of the volumes of the Navy Records Society. More than two centuries later there was still communication with Sluys by sea, when we find Queen Elizabeth's great captain, Sir Francis Vere, assisting in the defence of the town against the Spaniards. But now the scene has entirely changed. The geographer examines these changes, investigates their causes and effects from various points of view; but to do this he is entirely dependent on historical records and on the researches of antiquaries. The two classes of enquirers mutually assist and enlighten each other.

The encroachments and retirements of the sea on the coasts are by no means the only phenomena for a knowledge of which geographers are dependent on historical records. Equally important are the evidences of the rise and subsidence of land, and of the progress and causes of desiccation over vast tracts, especially in the Mediterranean region and in Central Asia.

The Council of the Royal Geographical Society has recognised the great importance of such investigations by creating a Department of Research; and it has approved a proposal to make researches respecting the encroachment of the sea, or the advance of land, as well as respecting the history of tidal rivers, on the eastern and southern coasts of England from Flamborough Head to Chisel Beach. These researches are intended to extend back to the evidence of the earliest historical records, as well as to embrace a comprehensive survey of the existing geographical conditions. The whole scheme could not well be undertaken at once without a large staff, so it was decided that the work should be done in five or perhaps six sections. It has been resolved that the first section shall embrace the coast of Holderness from Flamborough Head to Spurn Head, the river Humber, and its affluents so far as they are affected by tides.

These are researches, most of which have long engaged the attention of local antiquaries, and have been separately studied and written upon; but they have not yet been brought together as a harmonious whole from a geographical point of view; and in doing so the aid of the antiquary is indispensable to the geographer.

In passing in review the subjects that must engage the attention of those who undertake such enquiries, it will be unavoidable that I should touch upon many things which are quite familiar to the members of this Society. Still I trust that they will bear with me while I glance very briefly at the details of the work before us.

The action of the waves of the sea is different from the tidal action in rivers, and the way in which these forces have made themselves felt on the coasts and in rivers throws light on the changes which are recorded in history, and seen with our own eyes, while it teaches us the means whereby further incursions may be checked or entirely prevented. I believe more or less reliable calculations have been made respecting the extent of encroachments by the sea now, and the amount of land, measured in width, that has been lost in the last two thousand years.

The records begin with Ptolemy and the Roman itineries, and we may look to the final settlement of questions such as the exact position of the Prætorium station; while perhaps researches in Saxon times will tell us where King Athelstan fought the battle of Brunanburgh. We know that the Northumbrian King Edwin fought his last fight somewhere near Hatfield Chase. The area we have chosen was, indeed, the theatre of great events in the dawn of our history.

In the days when monasteries flourished I believe that the Priory of Swine held estates on the Holderness coast. We may, therefore, hope to learn much from the archives of religious houses respecting the encroachments of the sea on that coast. There must be remissions and grants on account of ground or buildings washed away by the sea and other similar notices. In Camden's Britannia several villages are mentioned as having disappeared, but their exact positions are not given nor the dates of their disappearance, only their names. No doubt this is well known to the East Riding Antiquarian Society. We may hope to have all such questions cleared up by the examination of monastic and other records. The changes at the Ocellum Promontorium are, of course, of very special interest, and have already received the attention of the late Mr. Thompson, of Cottingham; Mr. Boyle, author of "Lost Towns of the Humber; and other learned antiquaries. The whole of the evidence might be again considered and digested. We all remember that Ravenspur was the place where Henry of Bolingbroke landed to usurp the throne. There was an interval of seventy odd years; then two parties landed from two vessels near the same spot; one was led by the King, come to regain his rights, the other by his young brother, Richard of Gloucester. They search for and find each other. They march to the re-conquest of a kingdom. What changes had taken place on that coast in the interval between the landings of Bolingbroke and Edward of Rouen? What changes have occurred since? When did Ravenspur disappear? Leland tells us something; but surely there may be other sources of information which might be unearthed.

Passing round Spurn Head we come to the Humber, its banks and islands. Saxton, who gave us the first map of England drawn from surveys, was a Yorkshireman, and from the time of Saxton onwards we compare the changes in the Humber, the gradual increase in the size of Sunk Island for instance, in a long series of maps and charts down to the present day. I should imagine there must be records bearing on the subject at the Hull Trinity House, and for more recent years at the office of the Humber Conservancy.

The lower courses of the Trent, Ouse, and Aire, the Isle of Axholme, Hatfield Chase, Thorne Waste, and the history of the rivers, up to York as regards the Ouse, come within tidal influence, and this part of the subject has special interest. I understand that valuable papers are about to be published respecting the Isle of Axholme by the East Riding Antiquarian Society; and much has already been written on that district. In Hatfield Chase the story of the discovery of Scotch firs and other trees embedded in the peat is, I understand, very interesting and noteworthy. Here, too, Plantagenet kings hunted the deer from island to island by land and water, and had a hunting lodge where the Queen of Edward III. gave birth to his son William, the young Prince who was buried at York Minster. The whole story of these extensive morasses and their islands, within the tidal range, and of their gradual draining needs comprehensive treatment in a condensed form. There is also the story of the tidal rivers themselves. Mr. Davis, in his York Records, gives us some insight into the questions that arose respecting them as early as the time of Edward IV. and Richard III. The history of the use of the process of warping in agriculture, so well described to the Society of Arts by Mr. Creyke, of Rawcliffe, eighty years ago, is also a very interesting part of such an investigation as is proposed, as well as the measures for the navigation of the rivers.

The object is that the whole of the material should be exhaustively examined, the existing conditions surveyed, and that the knowledge thus acquired should be condensed and presented, mainly from a geographical point of view. The work has been undertaken by Mr. Mackinder, of Christ Church, Oxford, the Reader in Geography at that University; by Mr. Haverfield, also of Christ Church, Oxford, our greatest authority on Roman Britain; and by Dr. Marr, of Cambridge, the President of the Geological Society. They will commence by a study of the bibliography. The geological literature of the subject has been undertaken by Mr. G. W. Lamplugh, of the Geological Survey. Other help has been promised by Mr. J. W. Stather, of Hull.

Your President, Lord Hawkesbury, has expressed his interest in this undertaking of the Council of the Royal Geographical Society, and I feel sure that any help or advice will be readily given by East Riding antiquaries, to whom the work proposed cannot fail to be of interest.

Colonel Saltmarshe, R.A., read a very interesting paper on the changes on the Humber between Hull and Saltmarshe.

At the close of these papers an animated discussion followed, in which the following took part:—Rev. E. M. Cole, F.G.S., Mr. J. R. Boyle, F.S.A., Captain Hume, Mr. Butterfield, and Mr. Miles.

Mr. F. Haverfield, F.S.A., then addressed the meeting, and urged the local societies to keep in touch with national societies, so that by working in unity great things might be accomplished.

Thanks were returned to the readers of papers.

On Tuesday morning the members assembled at the Paragon Station yard, where carriages were waiting to convey the party to Hedon, Keyingham, Ottringham, and Halsham. At the two former places Mr. Boyle acted as guide, and read interesting accounts of the churches; at the latter places Mr. J. Bilson, F.S.A., described the churches as follows:—

OTTRINGHAM CHURCH.

The earliest church of which any remains survive seems to have been built during the 12th century; it doubtless consisted of an aisleless nave and chancel. Of this church there remain part of the west wall, part of the south wall of the nave near its south-east angle, and probably a great part of the south wall of the original chancel. Two corbels in the arcade spandrils on the north side of the nave evidently come from the corbel table of this church. The tower arch, which is pointed and decorated with zigzags, springs from scalloped capitals, and belongs to the second half of the 12th century. As the west wall is plastered, there is no evidence to show whether this tower was an addition to or part of the 12th century building mentioned above.

The lancet window on the south side of the chancel is an insertion of the first half of the 13th century. The north arcade of the nave also belongs to the 13th century. The south arcade is slightly later and contemporary with the addition of the south chapel, dating from the end of the 13th or early in the 14th century.

In the second quarter of the 14th century the chancel was reconstructed. With the exception of the west part of the older south wall, which was left standing, practically the whole chancel belongs to this date. The mullions and cusped heads of the easternmost window on the south side are, however, of the 15th century. During the 14th century the western tower and spire were built, and the windows east and west of the porch in the south aisle of the nave were inserted.

All the windows in the north aisle are insertions of the 15th century, as also are the window at the south end of the south chapel, and a window on the south side of the chancel. The nave clerestory was added during the 15th century.

On the north wall of the chancel, near its east end, there is a stone gospel lectern. There are brackets for images to the south of the east window, on the east respond of the south arcade of the nave, on the east wall of the south chapel, and on the east wall of the north aisle. The font is octagonal, of the 15th century, with a 17th century cover. There is some Elizabethan lettering on the south wall of the chancel between the Priest's door and the window to the west of it, and also on the pier in the centre of the east window, which proves that this pier is at least 17th century work.

HALSHAM CHURCH.

The first church of which any traces remain was of the aisleless nave and chancel type, dating from the middle of the 12th century. Of this there survive parts of the north wall and the north-west angle of the nave, and part of a window on the north side of the nave over the eastern curve of the eastern arch, which was left when the arcade was broken through. The windows were placed high in the walls; and part of the string under the windows and of the corbel course to the eaves remain.

The first alteration was the addition of the north aisle of the nave during the last quarter of the 12th century. The arches, which are pointed of a single square order, were opened out in the original north wall, and spring from a cylindrical pier in the centre, and semi-cylindrical respond piers.

The addition of a chapel on the north side of the chancel, with an arcade of two bays opening into the chancel, belongs to the 13th century. This chapel was either added to the 12th century chancel, or was part of a 13th century reconstruction of the chancel. The chapel was enlarged at a later date.

Extensive alterations were commenced in the second quarter of the 14th century. These included the rebuilding of the chancel, which is good work of the same school as the chancel at Patrington. The side windows have a flat wall-arch over them under the eaves. To the east of the Priest's door are the sedilia under crocketted hood moulds of ogee form, filled with blank flowing tracery. A fourth seat was added later at the west end of the three. There is a rich little piscina.

The reconstruction of the south aisle of the nave was contemporary with that of the chancel. The windows, traceried under a segmental arch, are similar to those of the south aisle of Welwick church. The south arcade has the capitals of its octagonal piers corbelled over on the cardinal faces, as in the south arcade of Welwick church. The tower arches are slightly later, but follow the same design, with north and south arches opening into an intended extension of the aisles along the flanks of the tower. The upper part of the tower and the west window are of the 15th century.

The wall of the north aisle was rebuilt in ashlar in the 15th century, and has a good north door with ogee hood mould. On the north side of the chancel a chapel, which was built during the 15th century, has been destroyed, but its piscina remains. The north chapel (westward of the last) was extended northward during the 17th century

Part of an altar slab remains in the south aisle. There is a curiously placed window high up in the south-east angle of the nave. The pulpit dates from 1634. There are two mediæval bells with the same cross and stops as at Bessingby.

The chapel on the north side of the chancel, which was dedicated to St. John of Beverley (will of Ralph Constable, died 1498), was the burial place of the Constable family. Under the eastern arch, between the chapel and the chancel, is an alabaster tomb of a knight, which can only be identified by its armour and architectural character. It is probably that of Sir John Constable, who, by his will, made in 1449 (pr. 1451), commends his soul to the most glorious Trinity and His infinite mercy, to the B. V. M. and All Saints, and his body to ecclesiastical burial in the parish church of Halsham, under a marble stone, viz: in the chapel where his progenitors have their burial. He married Margaret, daughter and coheir of Sir Thomas Umfraville. The tomb may possibly be that of his son, Sir John Constable (who married Lora Fitzhugh), will 1472 (pr. 1477), who left his body to be buried in Halsham church, near the body of Lora, his late wife. The character of the armour, however, seems rather to indicate the father than the son.

The tomb has four niches on the sides with pinnacles and crocketted ogee heads, with plain spaces between each niche. In each niche is an angel standing, holding a shield in front. Each end of the tomb has had two niches, but one of these at each end has been destroyed, and a panel with a shield, inserted probably in the 16th century. The niche at the west end contains the Virgin and Child, and that at the east end St. Christopher. Above the niches is an embattled cornice, and above this again is a black marble slab, which shews the indents of brasses, and which, of course, does not belong to the tomb. The effigy now rests upon this.

The effigy represents a knight in full plate armour. The hair is cropped and rolled over in the manner characteristic of Henry V.'s and Henry VI.'s time. He wears a plate gorget, SS collar, square plates over the armpits, fan-shaped coudes, plate gauntlets, with broad back plate and open cuff, breast plate, taces, and four small tuilles; horizontal sword belt diapered, fan-shaped knee caps, and long pointed plates over the shins. The armour is ornamented with diapered bands on the arms, legs, and down the shin points. The feet rest on a dog, and the head on a fine helm, with long sight holes, diapered bands, richly diapered orle, on which stands a lion's head crest. The sword and dagger are gone, but the cords remain.

The effigy was compared with the earlier alabaster effigies at Swine, and the effigy at Barmston, which is a little later than those at Swine, but apparently slightly earlier than that at Halsham.

The first meeting of the winter session was held in the Council room of the Royal Institution, Hull, on Wednesday, 22 Feb. 1905, during the afternoon.

A meeting of the Council preceeded the general meeting. The various places to be visited during the summer months were selected, and it was decided that the annual meeting should be held at Scarbrough.

At the general meeting Mr. T. Sheppard, F.G.S., read a very interesting paper, viz.:—"Notes on Important Archæological Discoveries made in East Yorkshire." It is hoped that this paper may be printed in the Transactions.

During the discussion following the paper, it was suggested that objects belonging to the Society, and at present lodged at York, should be handed over to the Museum at Hull.

It would be an excellent arrangement if some section of the Museum could be devoted to the Society's work. Much benefit would be derived by both bodies from such an arrangement.

Thanks were accorded Mr. Sheppard for his interesting paper.

The second meeting of the winter session was held at the Bell Hotel, Driffield, on Tuesday, 4th April, 1905, when a paper was read by the Rev. E. Maule Cole, F.G.S. entitled:—"Notes on Roman Coins, to the number of 14,000, found on the Wolds." Mr. Cole mentioned particularly the large hords of coins found at Nunburnholme, Cowlam and Wetwang, and pointed out that many specimens had been unearthed along the lines of the great Roman roads from York to the sea coast.

Thanks were accorded to Mr. Cole for his valuable paper.

The Secretary (Rev. A. N. Cooper) read some correspondence with the Curator of the York Museum relating to some antiquities in that Museum, which, it was contended, belonged to the Society.

NOTE

This Index was begun under the auspices of the Congress of Archæological Societies in union with the Society of Antiquaries. Its success being assured, the Congress have placed it in the hands of the publishers to continue yearly.

The value of the Index to archæologists is now recognised. Every effort is made to keep its contents up to date and continuous, but it is obvious that the difficulties are great unless the assistance of the societies is obtained. If for any reason the papers of a society are not indexed in the year to which they properly belong, the plan is to include them in the following year; and whenever the papers of societies are brought into the Index for the first time they are then indexed from the year 1891.

By this plan it will be seen that the year 1891 is treated as the commencing year for the Index, and that all transactions published in and since that year will find their place in the series.

To make this work complete an index of the transactions from the beginning of archæological societies down to the year 1890 is needed. This work is now going through the press.

Societies will greatly oblige by communicating any omissions or suggestions to the editor, Laurence Gomme, F.S.A., 24, Dorset Square, London, N.W.

Single copies of the yearly Index from 1891 may be obtained. Many of the Societies in union with the Society of Antiquaries take a sufficient number of copies of the yearly Index to issue with their transactions to each of their members. The more this plan is extended the less will be the cost of the Index to each society.

The subscription list for the complete Index up to 1890 is still open, and intending subscribers should apply at once to Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.
